

Summary: Countries Where Adderall is Illegal

Adderall, a prescription medication primarily used to treat ADHD, is considered illegal in several countries without proper medical authorization. The article lists the following countries where possessing Adderall without a prescription is illegal:

1. Canada: Classified as a controlled substance; illegal without a prescription.
2. United Kingdom: Class B controlled drug; unauthorized possession is illegal.
3. Australia: Schedule 8 controlled substance; illegal without a prescription.
4. Germany: Controlled substance; possession without prescription is illegal.
5. Japan: Classified as a narcotic; strict regulations apply.
6. Singapore: Controlled drug; possession without prescription is illegal.
7. United Arab Emirates (UAE): Not available; possession without prescription is illegal.
8. Sweden: Use without a prescription by a licensed medical practitioner is illegal.
9. Norway: Prescription medication; possession without prescription is illegal.
10. South Korea: Classified as a psychotropic drug; use without prescription is illegal.
11. Brazil: Prescription medication; possession without prescription is illegal.
12. China: Controlled substance; use without prescription is illegal.
13. India: Prescription medication; use without prescription is illegal.
14. South Africa: Schedule 7 controlled substance; use without prescription is illegal.

The article also discusses why Adderall is illegal in Europe, citing its high potential for abuse and addiction, and differing medical philosophies regarding ADHD treatment.

For full details, visit:

<https://tomvad.com/14-list-of-countries-where-adderall-is-illegal-updated/>